Case Study

A Beef Discussion Group from Anglesey benefitted from a meeting with Aled Roberts, RSK ADAS, discussing Beef Nutrition.

The group were aware that two main factors influence beef enterprise profit – beef ration cost and the time the animal takes to finish on farm. The members were eager to have a discussion that compared their own enterprises and to draw from the experience of a Beef Nutritionist.

The two main systems of finishing beef were explored:

- Concentrating on home grown forage, which is lower in cost but also has lower DLWG. Best done with lower stocking.
- 'Lorry acres' which depends on buying in the animal's ration. Best done when beef prices are high, but then throughput can be increased as stocking rates can be increased accordingly.

Aled stressed that good technical management is essential, as is correct targeted rationing.

Quote from group member:

"Now that I've had an insight into the importance of correct beef rationing, I'm interested in benefiting from Aled's expertise in more detail through the Farming Connect Advisory Service."

"We get a very broad cross section of customers, people from different ethnic backgrounds. Some of those customers buy it to make cheese, clotted cream and yogurt but many others just buy it to drink or to pour on their bowl of cereal."
