Part of the government support for businesses during the pandemic has been the release of record levels of debt finance into the economy to help businesses trade through the crisis. But we don't know how long that debt finance (or cash) will be needed to sustain those businesses, and, with a number of other challenges on the horizon, there is a real risk that businesses may still run out of cash. So if that happens, what are the alternatives – private equity, angel investment, crowdfunding? What are the pros and where are the pitfalls? Join our panel of equity finance experts to find out more.

Our speakers will be:

John Taylerson – Investor Ready, BIC Innovation

Alun Thomas – Development Bank of Wales

Mark Neath – Old Mill Accountants

Anthony De Souza – Crowd funding specialist

Jordan Thomas - Capital Law

Huw Thomas – Managing Director, Puffin Produce; Food & Drink Wales Industry Board
