

Wales Clean Seas Partnership

Is taking a leadership role and will deliver the Marine Litter Action plan for Wales to reduce marine litter.

Proud to be part of the UN Clean Seas Partnership

The Partnership is committed to taking action and addressing the root causes of marine litter. With over 30 years of Blue Flag Awards on our beaches in Wales and over 25 years of the Marine Conservation Society Beach Clean-up, Wales already has an impressive record of achievement. By taking a collaborative approach and engaging with organisations, businesses and communities committed to taking action, the Partnership will deliver the Marine Litter Action Plan for Wales.

Coronavirus (COVID-19)

We know that this is a difficult time. We also know how important it is to keep our beaches litter free. Please always follow the latest physical distancing and good practice guidelines.

What has been happening.....

Great British Beach Clean

Despite the unusual circumstances Marine Conservation Society downsized their beach cleans to small groups and enlisted friends, families and 'bubbles' to help clear beaches of litter and take part in the citizen science project. Over 3,000 metres of Welsh beach was cleaned and surveyed during 32 events, with 143 volunteers getting involved, including Welsh First Minister, Mark Drakeford. Read more.....

Ash Wales

Cigarettes are the most common form of litter in Wales and pose a huge environmental risk, often ending up in waterways and eventually the ocean after being washed down drains. ASH Wales, the Marine Conservation Society and Keep Wales Tidy want the sale of plastic-filled cigarette butts to be banned.
